FREMONT – The Fremont City Schools board will welcome its newest member Monday, as Daniel Sanchez will be sworn in to replace Marc Glotzbecker. Sanchez, a Fremont Ross High School graduate, currently serves as the chief probation officer and grant director for Fremont Municipal Court. He was one of seven candidates for the open board position, according to the school district.

He said he wanted to do something outside of his job to make an impact in the community. Sanchez said the school board post would be his first public position.

“I thought this was a great place to start to make a difference,” Sanchez said Thursday.
Glotzbecker, Gibsonburg’s village administrator, resigned in August after serving six years and part of two terms on the board.
As the newly-appointed school board member, Sanchez will serve until Dec. 31, 2015. He said he would assess some time next year whether he wanted to run for the school board position.
Sanchez is part of the Sandusky County Prevention Partnership Coalition’s opiate task force, which is looking at ways to combat the dangers of opiate abuse and the growing epidemic in Sandusky County.
He also has served as the grant director for the Northwest Ohio Behavioral and Reporting Services Program (No-Bars) for low-risk offenders, where a person may receive chemical dependency treatment, participate in cognitive behavioral programming, undergo drug testing or meet with a case manager.
Sanchez is married to Jessica Sanchez and has two children who both attend Fremont City Schools.
He said that he would start diving into issues facing the board when he starts Monday. “The board seems like a good group of people to work with,” Sanchez said.
